The Power of Positive Communication Performance Task

Think of a time when a friend, relative, parent, guardian, teacher, or trusted adult interacted with you in a positive way. Was it a warm hug, pat on the back, or positive words such as “Great Job,” “Thank you,” “I’m proud of you,” or “Thanks for being such a great friend?” Communication can be expressed verbally (through words) or nonverbally (through body language).

Part 1: Brainstorm

Think about your interaction with your friends and family members. Brainstorm 5 ways that you can display positive communication (verbal and/or nonverbal) with your friends and family members.

Friends	Family Members
_____	_____
_____	_____
_____	_____
_____	_____

Part 2: Create a Chart

Create a chart displaying your intent to express these forms of positive interactions with your friends and family members. Fill in the first column stating which positive verbal statement or nonverbal forms of communication you intend to express over the next 4 days to your friends and family members. Over the next 4 days, express these positive forms of communication. Complete column two and three immediately after expressing the positive form of communication.

Friend Chart

Positive Communication	Who received it?	What was their reaction to your positive communication?

Family Member Chart

Positive Communication	Who received it?	What was their reaction to your positive communication?

Part 3: Write a Reflection

Think about your experience with the positive communication with friends and family members. Write a short essay about this experience. Include the following information in your essay:

- How did your friends respond to your positive communication
- How did your family members respond to your positive communication
- How did the experience make you feel
